FANNY HYDE.

THE CLOSE OF A GREAT TRIAL.

District Attorney Britton's Argument for the People.

Judge Tappen's Charge to the Jury.

WAITING FOR THE VERDICT.

The same great crowd that has attended on the different days of the trial of Fanny Hyde assembled in the court room of the Kings County Oyer and Terminer yesterday morning to listen to the summing up for the people by District Attorney Winchester Britton. The Court opened at nine o'clock, at which time the chamber was densely crowded, many of those present being ladies. The crowd was so great that there was not the remotest por-ton or standing room.

The prisoner appeared wearied. Her confinement n the jail and the events of the past week have beun to have an effect upon her. She assumed a composure, however, and conversed with her rela-tives and counsel previous to the opening of the proceedings. Her husband was present, sombre nd silent. He had been a mute witness of the pro eedings throughout. Judge Tappen and Associate Justices Voorhees and Johnson appeared at the appointed hour, and District Attorney Britton began his address on be-half of the people. This is the first case of murder hat he has been called upon to try since he has held the office of District Attorney, and his address was anticipated with interest. Mr. Britton spoke for nearly four hours and made an eloquent speech, in the course of which he touched upon the question of insanity and reviewed the evidence bearing upon that point, and declared that for many years there has been a steady decrease in the belief awarded to the testimony of medical experts. I can prove that from the legal authorities, not only of this country, but also from those of England and Scotland. Chief Justice Chapman, of Mussachusettis, said, "I think the opinions of experts are not so highly valued now as they formerly were, for the reason that an expert can be found to testify to almost any theory." Assume, if you please, that it was a fact that when nearly sixteen years of age this intimacy commenced through the wiles and machinations of the seducer, that you will see is based upon the theory that the man alone was faise, and that she was an innocent victim. What is the evidence upon that point? What occurred during the first six months she was in that factory no tongue can tell but hers. She alone can tell what arts were resorted to, what inducements were held out, for her to forfeit her virtue. She can tell—he cannot, for he is in the cold and silent grave. Is it to be held that a girl of sixteen years of age, because she loses her virtue, is still a subject over which counsel can say, "God bless her?" How many girls to-day are in the houses of prostitution of New York, and much younger than she is! How many girls are there peddling their wares about the stores and offices of New York? They are much younger than she is, and yet are as willing to sell their persons as their wares. Now, the difference between a young girl in your parlor and mine, and one who has worked in a factory, is greater, perhaps, than you may imagine, and is it to be assumed that upon the estimony which has been introduced here, that this defendant was an innocent young girl in your parlor and mine, and one who has worked in a fac the omee of District Attorney, and his address was anticipated with interest. Mr. Britton spoke for early four hours and made an eloquent speech, aussano consived at this criminal relations existing between the prisoner and Watson. After glancing briefly at the testimony relative to the shooting the counsel referred to the fact that the prisoner said to Captain Woglom, "He seduced me;" and that the night before they had had a quarrel because he told her she was going with other men. She said he had followed her and she could not stand it any longer, and she shot him for satisfaction. "Satisfaction," What does that meant is not ine:"and that the night before they had had a quarrel because he told her she was going with other men. She said he had followed her and she could not stand it any longer, and she shot him for satisfaction. "Satisfaction!" What does that mean? Is not that the key to the motive? Satisfaction for what? Bid she say, then, he setzed hold of her violently and committed a personal indignity upon her? Nothing at all of the kind, because the stage effect had not been prepared. Then, what did she say to Sergeant Bunce? Why, that she shot him for satisfaction. And could there be a plainer view of the motive, which counsel for the defence said the prosecution had not developed?

At the conclusion of Mr. Britton's address, amid a breathless silence

JUDGE TAFFEN CHARGED THE JURY.

GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY—Much eloquent argument and great forensic ability and profound legal knowledge have accompanied the trial of this case from its commencement to its close. Counsel in all things have done their duty most faithfully on the part of the defence and the accused, and on the part of the defence and the accused, and on the part of the defence and the accused and on both sides that is not legitimate as bearing upon it, and should not under any circumstances enter into the consideration of the jury charged with its decision. For such duty of the Court, therefore, with the arguments of counsel, which they have finally closed, I must, at the final moments of the trial, call back the minds of the jury of the court and always upon the juryors to a caim, dispassionate, reasonable and just construction of the case upon which they are to decide, and more particularly in this, the case on trial, where the prisoner is charged with the crime of wilful murder. Jurers in such cases are, it may almost be said, the exponents of the fate of the person upon trial. It is a question with that the twelve jurors who are sworn to try the case ruminate and predicate according to the evidence. Therefore, because of the high responsibility resting somewhat u about to be committed to their hands to discharge their minds from all considerations foreign to the case and to enter direct and closely into its particular merits.

Now, what is this case? The accused is placed upon trial, charged with the crime of wiful murder—the highest crime known to the law. It is the flat of the Deity that "Thou shalt not kill," and it is likewise the law in all civilized communities, and whoever trangresses or ordends jeopardizes his or her own life. The circumstances and features which have been developed in this case are peculiar, and distinguish it from many others of much celebrity. The person killed was 2 man in the prime of manhood, in the full vizor of life, engaged in active business, mingling with the busy world, having a home and a family. The accused has all her alife, and that not very long ago, from a period of about eight years, contributed by her own labors to her own support. In the year 1808, or thereabouts, she entered the employment of the deceased, and so remained, with some interruptions and intervals, to January, 1872, and during this period the outward relation subsisting between them was that to January, 1872, and during this period the outward relation subsisting between them was that of master and servant. I say the outward relation between them was that of master and servant. I say the outward relation because it is claimed on her behalf that another and a more intimate, a hidden, a secret, a criminal relation also existed between them during almost the entire period. Under these circumstances and on the 20th of last January, in this country, the life of Walson, the deceased, was taken, and the accused stands at the bar of this Court charged with being his murdereress.

Just turning her eighteenth year, at a period of life when in all things we always find innoceace and simolicity—those traits which always grace girlhood and budding womanhool—on the very throwhold of her—file she is placed on trial as a criminal, under a most grave and serious charge, and it leave it. With the respect to the property of the control on the control on the control on the control on the control of the control on the control of the c of temporary insanity. I hold in my hand the account of the trial of Samuel M. Andrews, charged with the murder of Cornelius Holmes in Massachusetts in September, 1888. The defence set up was that of temporary insanity, and his guilt was established without a doubt. The two men had been friends, and there appeared to be a lack of motive, and it was discovered that the dead man had, sometime before the killing took place, made a will in favor of the person who took his life, and there was then a motive explaining an otherwise strange affair. The case went to trial and was fully presented upon the question of temporary insanity. It was shown that the prisoner had descended from a race several of whom had been unquestionably insane, and yet that up to the moment when he was charged with the crime he himself had given no symptom of aberration of mind. He was a man of fifty years of age, had lived a blameless life, and insanity in his case had never been supposed. The two chief witnesses were Dr. Choate, introduced by the defence. They had opposing views. Dr. Choate had grave doubts; indeed he did not believe in the doctrine of temporary insanity. Dr. Jarvis, on the other hand, maintained that it was a well known feature developed by scientific investigation on the state of the human mind. Dr. Choate was asked to make a general statement on this subject, and had never known of a case of insanity originating and terminating in a single act of violence, and that he had never known such a case to exist; but he says that motive is a material consideration, and then goes on to indicate how the act of an insane person may be distinguished from that of a sane person may be distinguished from that of a sane person may be distinguished from that of a sane person in the commission of crime, as do those who are in possession of their faculties. He says the subsequent conduct of the person where there is no flight or attempt at flight is indicative of insanity; and he says that when the offence is contrary to the whole tenor of

and that, or course, it had a period include to the This is the chief element in this case, and I shall not detain you long, but I simply wish to give you instruction which may lead to an intelligent conclusion in your minds.

In other cases Dr. Jarvis said it was not a new or an old disease, and that it was established by the Courts. The indications by which an intelligent conclusion could be formed as to the condition of mind of the person committing the act, he says, is a sudden outbreak, subsequent calmness, no adequate motive and hereditary insanity.

I hold here a compilation of cases in which life has been suddenly taken during the last twenty years where no motive could be ascribed for the act, where the persons committing these would undoubtedly have suffered death unless the doctors of the mind had been listened to in defence. And yet, gentiemen, it is a delence which requires great consideration, and Judge Edmonds has laid down many evidences of a sane person, and all of them go and unite to make up sanity, but, says the learned Judge, "the absence of any one of them proves insanity." With respect to the burden of proofs, I have said that the prosecution must make out the burden of proof against a responsible being; but where the defence of insanity is set up and the killing is admitted, Imay say to you that if you have any doubt as to her sanity she is entitled to the benefit of that doubt. The defence of insanity must be established by preponderance of proof. Sympathy is misplaced in the jury box, but the sword of justice is the weapon which is placed in your hands, and whether its edge is to be turned away from her or not, you must remember to do justice in all things, and may God defend the right. The jury then, at twenty minutes to two o'clock, retired to their room. The court room remained crowded and speculation as to the probable result of their deliberation was indulged in. As the first, second and third hour passed without word from the jury, it was thought that they would not agree.

in the City Park several years ago, which excited intense interest at the time, did not attract and retain the crowd that the trial of Fanny Hyde has. The City Hall bell proclaimed the hour of nine, but still the jury came not. Much speculation was indulged in as to what the verdict would be. The general opinion appeared to be that they would not agree, but there were many who thought that they would find the girl guilty of some degree of manshaughter. At one time it was reported that they would find the girl guilty of some degree of manshaughter. At one time it was reported that the jury stood eleven for acquittal and one for conviction, and the report created considerable excitement for a short time in the court room. Several times during the evening the announcement was made that the jury was about to appear. Great excitement prevailed, and an immediate rush was made for the spectators' benches, which were soon filled. The jury box was also cleared, but, after all, the announcement was but a false alarm. No jury appeared, and the spectators roamed about the room again, and the buzz of conversation continued louder than before.

THE JURY CANNOT POSSIBLY AGREE.

At half-past ten o'clock Judge Tappen, Judge Gilbert and Associate Justice Voorhees appeared in Court and the jury summoned. It was then discovered that Associate Justice Johnson was not present. As the Court could not proceed in his absence, officers were sent out to find him. After scouring the neighborhood they found Johnson and took him to the court room.

The foreman of the jury informed the Court that it was utterly impossible for them to agree upon a verdict.

Judge Tappen inquired if there was any question upon which he could instruct the jury.
The foreman replied that there was a diversity of opinion on the testimony.
Judge Tappen—How iong has that diversity continued?

Judge Tappen—How long has that diversity continued?

Foreman—From the first.
Judge Tappen—The Court may ask whether it is a diversity in respect to which the Court may enlighten the jury?

Foreman—I think the Court has done so.
Judge Tappen invited the jury to make any statement to the Court in respect to which they could be listructed.

There was no response.
Judge Tappen alluded to the fact that the jury had not been out so long as juries in other cases. These cases, he said, are of great importance to the accused and the people. They are cases which involve a great deal of labor both on the part of the prosecution and defence. They are generally cases which involve more or less public expense also. This is a case which ought to be determined and one which seems to have been very fully presented both in respect to testimony and argument of counsel and in respect to law. The Court, therefore, did not feel justified in discharging the jury, as they had not been out so long a time as juries in similar cases had. The Court fet! it to be its duty to ask the jury to again retire.

A juror, Mr. Rowan, stated that they could not agree upon a verdict if they were kept out until next January.
Judge Tappen, however, sent them out again. The jurors smiled as they departed.
